Paul The Spirit And People

I believe the author drove home the view that Paul had concerning the promised outpouring, or God's returning presence, of His Spirit. The apostle Paul understood the importance of the Spirit of God in the lives of the believers that they may be renewed, sanctified, transformed, and empowered to live a life worthy of their calling and to attain salvation which will be consummated sometime in the future.

Spirit and the flesh, in light of Romans 7:14-25 - although the Spirit is not so much as mentioned in the Romans pas-sage, where Paul describes the conflict that goes on in the soul of a person living , under law and without the Spirit's help. People accept this unfortunate reading of Paul at face

Paul, the Spirit, and the People of God

It is surprising that Christology does not have a higher profile in defining what Paul counts as being 'spiritual': the 'body' controlled wholly by the Spirit (1 Cor. 15:44) will reflect the image of Christ (15:49). But for the most part this is a helpful, clear and readable book based on a close study of Paul.

His concern boiled down to how churches understood the person and role of the Holy Spirit. Fee concluded that the contemporary Western church, Pentecostal and non-Pentecostal, is missing the point of the Spirit's coming. The church is therefore "quenching the Spirit," marginalizing and domesticating him, ...

The book's title pointedly reflects, then, Fee's bedrock convictions about Paul's theology of the Spirit. The Spirit is a person who embodies the presence of God himself, a person who indwells and empowers God's people in this present age. The book represents more than an exegetical exercise for the author.
