The House Of Hunger By

The House of Hunger is as much a product of being down and out sleeping rough, being beaten up by thugs and policeman alike and struggling with alcoholism, as it is of the Rhodesia it describes.... The 'hunger' of the book's title does not refer only to the literal starvation which was ravaging post-independent Zimbabwe at the time.

The House of Hunger - Wikipedia

The House of Hunger is painful to read, painful to ponder, and I found it brought my own experience of childhood homelessness to the front of my mind. In this book, Dambudzo stood in his experience, acted out his life in it, and foists it upon the reader. It's a tour-de-force of the author's indelible trauma and subsequent mental illness.

House of Hunger was, by some accounts, written in exile in Oxford in a small tent alongside the River Isis. Yet its opening sentences forge a powerful connection between all dumping grounds, be they Third World locations and shantytowns or First World waste spaces: "I got my things and left. The sun was coming up. I couldn't think where to go.

His first book and magnum opus, The House of Hunger (1978), came immediately after his largely disappointing time at New College, Oxford University. Among the nine stories it contains, the long title story describes the narrator's troubled childhood and youth in colonial Rhodesia in a style that is emotionally compelling and verbally pyrotechnic.

This sort of constraining expectation has been with African literature in the West for decades; nothing could be farther from Dambudzo Marechera's bright white-phosphorous novella, House of Hunger. The House of Hunger— the novella plus eight short stories—was published in the U.S. in 1979 and the U.K. the year before.
